When George Barr McCutcheon's thrilling romantic novel, "Graustark," or "A Love Behind a Throne," was first published the reviewers were unanimous in declaring it to be the most intensely interesting and absorbing play in the modern realm of romantic fiction, and the wonder is that the dramatic possibilities of this book were not earlier recognized. The story abounds with what the dramatists term "love-interests" and simply overflows with intrigue, startling denouements and exciting dramatic climaxes. Consequently the phenomenal success with which the play has already met is not surprising. "Graustark" was the means of establishing Mr. McCutcheon in the front ranks of American novelists, and according to the publishers, there have been sold up to date more than five hundred thousand copies of this one book, and the combined sale of the different novels he has written during the past six years exceeds those of any other American author. "Graustark" as a play has broken records for the season in every theatre where it has been presented. It comes to the opera house next Thursday evening, Dec. 10th.
